Conn Maciel Carey's OSHA practice was featured in Inside OSHA this month in "Attorneys Urge Employers to Press OSHA for Performance-Based Heat Rule"

The article highlights a recent blog post by Eric J. Conn, CMC's Co-Founding Partner and Chair of the firm's national OSHA & Workplace Safety Practice, and Partner Beeta Lashkari, on why employers should push now for a flexible, performance-based federal heat illness prevention standard. Without a federal rule, OSHA keeps enforcing heat-related hazards through its renewed National Emphasis Program and the General Duty Clause, and states keep developing/adding their own requirements.

The piece also notes Partner Kate McMahon's earlier comments on the tension between OSHA leadership and the White House Office of Management and Budget (OMB) over the rule. It covers CMC's Employers Heat Illness Prevention Coalition, which is urging the agency to move forward with a workable rule that would bring national consistency for multistate employers.
